Had some good luck fishing for Bluefin Tuna here in Cape Cod at a family reunion. Two of my sons, one of their significant others, and I went out yesterday in hopes of finding something catchable. At the first place we tried, they were too big (300 to 500 pounds). At the second place further south they were just right (100 to 200 pounds). Casting large plugs with heavy spinning gear I finally hooked a 67-inch long, 48-inch girth beauty. The online weight estimator says about 188 pounds. Wish I'd brought my 10-wt, but then I'd still be out there fighting him. It took three of us about 20 minutes to land it on 80-pound line. Next time I'll have to bring a heavier rod!

Just as we set the anchor in about 16 feet of water the birds started crashing bait next to the boat. On my second cast I landed my first bluefish ever. Just a few casts later as I was picking up the line for another cast, a blue took my fly right at the surface. What a fun day of fishing. Chalk another one up to the Clouser minnow. Attachments: File comment: Bluefish  BlueFish.jpg [100.73 KiB Viewed 3156 times]

We fished the Mobjack Bay area... For exact locations you must be a taker ;). To say it was hot would be an understatement, but the heat off your mind. All three of us nailed the inshore slam, with Gary doing it on the fly!... Well done! Anyway, lots of Reds and Croakers. Pictured is Gary with the largest Spec of the day.. Attachments:

This Spec Trout caught on spinning gear with a jighead/plastic tail, you can see it in the picture. Attachments:

Key Largo is a beautiful place (see picture with view from where we were meeting) with clear water, great weather, etc. The only problem - no fish! We had plenty of time to take kayaks out to explore the islands and practice casting, but only saw an occasional small fish. Had a bone chase my chartreuse and white Clouser right up to the kayak a couple of times, but he wasn't very hungry. Sarasota was much better. Kayaked out in Sarasota Bay and found plenty of Ladyfish, an occasional Redfish and keeper Sea Trout. Had to dodge a few storms, but we stayed behind an island and snuck back to shore when the winds died down. Attachments:  Key Largo (Gator's).jpg [33.61 KiB Viewed 2126 times]
